ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method for arithmetic overflow detection includes receiving a first instruction defined for a first processor having a first base, where the instruction comprises an operator and at least one operand having an operand type. The method also includes indicating whether the at least one operand has potential overflow based at least in part on the operator and the relationship between the operand type and a result type associated with the operator.